European Commission officials and national competition authorities across the EU have started to enforce the Digital Markets Act (DMA). This is a challenging exercise and enforcers will face many questions brought in by this new regulatory framework.

While built on a number of rules that respond to similar behaviours that have been sanctioned in the past as abuses of dominant position, the DMA is an entirely new legal instrument. It is to be expected that enforcers will look at competition case law and literature as a reference point, but the DMA's objectives are different, and complementary, to those of EU competition law. Enforcers should therefore be cautious not to heavily borrow competition case law and concepts in the implementation of the DMA. Rather, they should work to interpret and apply the DMA in a way that guarantees their full potential in order to achieve the regulation's ambitious objectives of contestability and fairness in digital markets.

Scholars have a key role to play in this scenario. They can assess the deeper layers and enforcement framework of the new rules, interpret their content, and assess the rules' potential in their own right and in relation to other fields of EU law to support the enforcers in making informed decisions.

The Amsterdam Centre for European Law and Governance, the Hertie School Centre for Digital Governance, and the University of Trento, with the support of the free expression organisation ARTICLE 19, are pleased to provide a forum for deep collaboration between academia and regulators at this symposium, where invited scholars can present and discuss their research on key DMA enforcement challenges.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This joint event is part of ongoing ARTICLE 19 work supported by the Adessium Foundation and Open Society Foundations to contribute to the advancement and proper enforcement of laws and policies that guarantee freedom of expression and a healthier digital sphere in the EU.

The symposium is the follow up to a call for abstracts launched in June 2023, and we are deeply grateful to the members of the Scientific Committee who peer-reviewed the abstracts we received and helped with the selection process.

We thank the Amsterdam Centre for European Law and Governance, the Hertie School Centre of Digital Governance, and the University of Trento for their extremely valuable collaboration and cooperation throughout this project.
